Dear PCDC Hiring Team,

Access to quality healthcare should not depend on a person's ZIP code, income, or ability to navigate a complicated system. Too many people in under-resourced communities are denied not only care, but the dignity of being heard, respected, and supported. PCDC's work as a CDFI, financing and advising the safety-net providers who serve those communities, is why I am applying for the Director of Consulting Operations role. It offers an opportunity to put my operational and financial experience directly behind that conviction.

Across business leadership, workforce development, and healthcare advisory work, I have focused on expanding access and helping organizations deliver on their commitments. At Osborne, that meant strengthening businesses and employment pathways for people returning from incarceration. Through the NYPA clean-energy workforce program, it meant helping participants gain skills and access new career opportunities. In my current healthcare advisory work, it means helping a practice address the financial, staffing, and administrative challenges that affect its ability to serve patients. Each experience reinforced the same lesson: access depends on organizations having the resources, systems, and people to sustain it.

I have done this operational work directly. At Osborne, I built pricing, monetization plans, and budgets for earned-revenue service lines, managed staffing hours and compensation for a 140-person division, and led 12 direct reports through weekly operating and financial reviews. In my consulting practice, I manage hourly billing and track client engagements in CRM systems. I have led system rollouts from selection through launch, including a warehouse-management implementation that cut processing time 60%. I also stood up the NYPA program from the ground up, piloting the model before full rollout and reaching a 92% certificate-completion rate.

What appeals to me most about this role is the connection between purpose and execution. A consulting practice that serves both fee-for-service clients and grant-funded programs needs thoughtful pricing, realistic capacity planning, reliable engagement tracking, and disciplined financial management to do its best work. After years of leading at the executive level, I am seeking a role where I own that operating engine day to day: bringing clarity to complex situations, supporting colleagues, and building practical processes that make their work easier and their impact more durable.

I would welcome the opportunity to discuss how I can help PCDC's consulting practice operate with clarity and grow sustainably. Thank you for your time and consideration.

Sincerely,

Clavel Lazarre, MBA
